- 1) For each payment the other party should have made, you will need to print the due date, what was due, how much (if anything) was paid, and what is still owed, the interest, and if applicable the penalties.

Due date: This is the specific date that the party should have paid.

Amount due: This is how much the other party should have paid on that specific date.

Date payment received: If the other party made a payment, write the date you received the payment. If you did not receive anything, print “not received.”

Amount received: Print the amount you received from the other party. If you did not receive anything, print “0.”

Arrears this period: This is how much the other party still owes you for that payment. The calculation is: Amount due – Amount received.

Interest: Nevada law allows you to collect statutory interest for any amounts not paid. Interest is based on the state’s prime interest rate PLUS 2%. The rate changes every January and every July. Current and past interest rates can be found at www.washoecourts.com.

Penalties: This only applies to child support arrears that have been due and owing for longer than 30 days. You are entitled to a 10% per annum penalty on any child support arrears owed for longer than 30 days.

Total Arrears, Interest, and Penalties Due: Add the numbers in each column for a grand total at the bottom.
